"Journal of International Business (JIBS): The one scientific journal on firms navigating the global economy. Multinational enterprises and international ventures are typically portrayed in black or white terms. Are they heroes who keep global value chains working, even during major crises such as the COVID-19 pandemic? Or are they villains, exploiting the world's natural resources and its most vulnerable communi-

For more than 50 years, JIBS has been the one reliable academic source showing that internationally operating firms are neither heroes, nor villains. JIBS publishes advanced research on how companies active in the global economy navigate complexity, context, connections and community.
